STORY CORNER

HOW A SERENDIPITOUS MEETING OF A FARMER AND A CHEMIST LEAD TO THE BEGINNING OF AN ERA:

We all have heard how great discoveries were mostly accidental be it penicillin, small pox vaccine and even x rays. This story is also about one such discovery that paved the way for an era of oral anticoagulants.

In the early 1920s the livelihood of farmers in Northern America and Canada was threatened by the mysterious deaths of cattle. Hundreds of cattle died due to major haemorrhaging after minor procedures like dehorning, castration and the farms of Wisconsin and Alberta felt the effect of the loss of cattle. In 1933 a distraught farmer met an agriculture chemist Karl Paul Link at the University of Wisconsin. Link along with his team discovered that Coumarin present in the cow's spoiled sweet clover feed caused bleeding and after extensive research he proposed that the spoiling process transformed coumarin into dicumarol which in turn interfered with the clotting properties of vitamin K. Link and his lab manager Mark Arnold Stahmann synthesized many analogues of coumarin but rejected one which was deemed as too potent for human use. At the time Link's work was supported by Wisconsin Alumni Research Foundation (WARF) and thus the potent molecule was named warfarin but was sold as a rat poison!

It was found to be safe for human use after a young navy recruit attempted suicide by consuming the "rat poison" and was saved after giving doses of vitamin K.

With the knowledge that its effects could be reversed it wasn't long before Endo Labs made the first batch of warfarin intended for human use under the trade name Coumadin.

And thus the death of cattle paved the way for oral anticoagulants!

Entwined together, a single entity
On and on we go, blooming serenity.
Hands held, promised to not let go,
On and on we go, fading glow.
Empty handed, side by side
On and on we go, slowing stride.
Deserted land across us,
On and on we go, to creeping dusk.
Scarcely seen, voice fades,
On and on we go, a misty crusade.
All alone, a solitary cruise
On and on... I go?
